Stellar Run Campaign — Why It Worked

The Stellar Run marketing campaign is the most successful the studio has executed in the past five years. Total paid spend of $77M generated an estimated $310M in earned media value, producing an effective media multiplier of 5.0x.

The campaign's pivotal element was a phased influencer strategy executed in the 45 days before release. Phase one targeted science and technology content creators (combined reach: 84M followers) with early-access screenings and exclusive behind-the-scenes content. Phase two engaged entertainment influencers (combined reach: 210M followers) with a zero-gravity AR filter that generated 1.4B organic impressions on TikTok and Instagram Reels in the 10 days before release.

The AR experience alone drove 18M app downloads globally in two weeks. Post-release social listening data shows that 61% of opening-weekend ticket buyers cited social media content — not television advertising — as their primary awareness source. This is why Stellar Run remains trending on all major platforms four months after its theatrical release, with April 2025 streaming views running 2.1x higher than its Q1 average.

Dark Orbit vs Last Kingdom Campaign Comparison

Dark Orbit invested $60M in a traditional broadcast-led campaign and achieved $680M box office. Last Kingdom invested $8M in a targeted digital campaign and achieved $310M — a 38x revenue-to-spend ratio versus Dark Orbit's 11x.

The key difference is audience retention. Dark Orbit's broadcast campaign attracted a wide opening weekend audience, but 39% of viewers did not complete the film on first streaming. Last Kingdom's targeted campaign reached a pre-qualified drama audience whose 84% completion rate drove sustained algorithmic recommendation across streaming platforms.

Recommendation: For dramatic narratives with strong completion potential, a targeted digital campaign outperforms broad broadcast spend.

Comedy Campaign Retrospective

All three Q1 2025 comedy campaigns were underfunded relative to comparable titles. Average spend of $3.5M per title, concentrated in social media, failed to generate sufficient awareness. Pre-release tracking scores for comedy titles averaged 28 out of 100, versus 71 for action and 64 for drama.

A minimum of $15M per comedy title is recommended, with at least 40% allocated to television and outdoor for broad demographic reach.
